Quality.

Six months of coascless labor, night and day, by an immense torce of skilled workmen, and at immense corese, has given the city a building imposing in proportions and design and unexcelled as a temple of industry and a vast bazar.

Since April 1 the old buildings at the southwest corner of Eleventh and F streets have disappeared and in their place the immense Moses building has risen with its seven lofty stories, towering up above all the private buildings of the city, saving even the roof of the Franklin School building, on its hilltop, on a lower level, climbing bigher than the State Lepartment roof and looking down upon the Hule buildings clustering on every side.

The elevator trip to the top of the building seems like ascending the monument, but when the roof is reached and the grand pancrama is spread below one's feet the scene is inspiring and impressive. More than one hundred feet below the tide of humanity ebbs and flows on F street, while all around the city spreads out to the surrounding hills, and looking down upon the house-tops a brid-serview is obtained unequaled from any other point of observation in the city.

Fort Washington and the dag at Mount Vernon are visible to the southward, Arlagton and the rolling bills beyond it to the Wost; the view eastward is out off by a range of hills beyond the fair-grounds, and northward the Soldiers' Home and Howard University are plainly visible.

This imposing structure, created by Messre W. B. Moses & Son, affords perhaps the largest building in the United States devoted solely to the retail furniture; carpet, and upholstery trade.

There are few places of rotail trade of any find to compare with it. It was designed by Mr. A. B. Mullet, the architect of the State, War, and Navy building, and built by Mr. J. H. Howelt, and commands a frontage of more than fifty feet, a depth of one hundred and twenty, and is over one hundred feet in height. The seven stories above ground vary from fourteen to eleven feet in height of ceiling, and each consists of attractive bazar, tasteful and striking in arrangement.

Descending to the basement, which is the full size of the building, with the addition of the sidewalks on both fronts, the upholstery workshops and large storage rooms are found, while in the cellar still lower down, the engines for the steam heating and elevator apparatus, the gas metre, that reasonbles a small gasworks in itself; the extensive coal vaults and spacious storerooms are also found.

Ascending to the second floor the finest varieties of carpets, the body Brussels and tapesty Brussels, and velvets, Singran carpets, stair carpets, rings of every variety, and borders of all kinds are displayed in wondrous variety, greater it would seem than the demands of a single city would ever require. The department of fur rungs is one of special interest, skins of raccoons, wild cats, black bears, welves, and foxes forming pleturesque floor decorations.
